

Travel restrictions

Remote Aboriginal communities in the Kimberley

- The coronavirus (COVID-19) has the potential to do great harm to the Kimberley's 221 remote Aboriginal communities.
- Aboriginal people living in remote areas are more at risk of serious illness from the coronavirus than other people.
- If the coronavirus gets into an Aboriginal community, it is likely to spread quickly and make residents very sick.
- To help protect our Aboriginal communities, there are strict travel restrictions in place.
- Tourists and travellers are not allowed to enter remote Aboriginal communities in Western Australia.
- Fines of up to $50,000 may apply to anyone who breaches the restrictions.
- Only some Aboriginal communities are excluded from the restrictions.
- In the Kimberley, the following Aboriginal communities or community amenities are currently open to tourists and travellers:

Dampier Peninsula, West Kimberley <ul style="list-style-type: none">• Burriguk (entire community)• Djarindjin roadhouse• Dampier Peninsula police station• Djarindjin airstrip (private airstrip)• Embulgun (entire community)• Gnylmarung (entire community)• Googar Goonyool (entire community)• Goombaragin (entire community)• Gumbarnun (entire community)• Lombadina (entire community)• Mercedes Cove (entire community)	West Kimberley <ul style="list-style-type: none">• Imintji campground• Imintji store• Imintji arts centre• Mimbi visitor access road• Mimbi visitor reception building• Mowanjum Aboriginal Art and Culture Centre East Kimberley <ul style="list-style-type: none">• Violet Valley campground in Baulu-Wah• Carranya (entire community)• Wuggubun (entire community)• Doon (Woolah) caravan park• Doon (Woolah) roadhouse
--	---

- All other remote Aboriginal communities in the Kimberley and their amenities are closed to tourists and travellers.
- Please travel responsibly – help keep our Aboriginal communities safe.
- For more information, call 13 COVID (13 268 43) or visit wa.gov.au